Hand painted in Italy circa 1980 and signed by Italian artist, Rettigi, the still life painting captures a vibrant bouquet of flowers in a decorative pitcher. The flowers, primarily shades of pink and white, are arranged in a way that showcases their natural beauty, with a mix of blooms and foliage cascading outward. The artist's brushwork is loose yet precise, giving the flowers a lively texture that almost brings them to life. The soft, muted background allows the bouquet to stand out, creating a harmonious balance between detail and simplicity. The pitcher, adorned with a delicate, possibly hand-painted design, adds an element of charm and history to the composition. Its placement on a patterned cloth, rendered in cool, subtle tones, further enhances the scene's depth and texture. The ornate white frame surrounding the painting complements the subject's elegance, adding a vintage touch that echoes classic still life traditions. The large painting is in excellent condition with rich colors, and the frame has wonderful carvings with a light white painted finish. This painting is a lovely example of floral art, blending color, texture, and composition in a way that feels both fresh and timeless, making it a delightful piece for any lover of traditional still life paintings. Use it to decorate a study or powder room. 32"W x 38.5"H
